Who am I?

I come from a creative background, working as a self-employed photographer before I pursued my career as a Frontend developer. It might sound like a drastic switch between the two but to me programming has been a nice way to combine a creative work process when developing with a more intellectual challenge that I find very stimulating.

On a more personal note, I live in the countryside in the middle of the south of Sweden with nature and wild animals outside the door. I enjoy the calm here but can equally enjoy a busy city like Mumbai or New York. I love meeting people from different parts of the world and exploring new contexts.

The artist in me loves working with her hands. I have many diverse interests that range from drawing to renovating windows. One thing I really enjoy is to create things from a blank piece of paper...

My thoughts as a developer

As a developer I aim to write clear, manageable, and maintainable code. I have some experience in writing automatic tests and TDD. At my previous employment as a Frontend developer for Lvira I have mostly been working in React using Typescript and Material UI. Due to working in an older system a part of development has been to refactor, improve and upgrade things as you run into them. I have also been part of the secondline support and helped our internal staff with technical issues in the system.

From my time at the university, I have knowledge on strategic communication and enjoy being part of the entire flow from idea to a working product. In the future I hope to add more skills to my toolbox and become a full stack developer. It is also close to my heart to create nicely designed and user-friendly products. I am currently enrolled in a part-time UX course.

What I hope to bring to your team

To me the company culture and the teams ability to connect and work together in a prestige less, exploring, and supportive way is key to creating a good product. I feel that learning and sharing knowledge between team members is a great way to build a strong team. I am independent and used to taking on individual responsibility, but I also make sure to take an active role in creating good relationships with teammates.

Thank you for the opportunity to tell you a little bit about me. I look forward to hearing from you.

Sincerely,
JENNY BÄCKLIN
